

The Palace's Helen Shaham Among Influential Business Woman Honorees

MIAMI—Helen Shaham is among good company. The president and co-founder of The Palace Management Group, one of South Florida's leading companies specializing in senior housing and care, was recently included in the South Florida Business Journal's listing of the most Influential Business Women for 2009.

The selection of honorees, conducted by the SFBJ's editorial staff and the publisher, was based on business accomplishments, professional leadership and community contributions.

Shaham was one of 25 women recognized at a July 16 luncheon at the Hyatt Pier Sixty-Six in Fort Lauderdale, Fla.

“It's very validating to see women honored for their business success and achievements,” said Shaham. “My success, however, is shared with the entire team of valued employees who work for The Palace communities.”

According to the South Florida Business Journal, the honorees are natural mentors & powerful leaders who generously give their time and insight to those they work with, helping them reach higher and higher levels of success. At the same time, it's clear these women are constantly growing, both personally and professionally. They can do this on both fronts because they are the consummate multi-taskers.

Shaham co-founded The Palace with her husband, Jacob, in 1980. Since then, the company has grown to encompass a continuum of care campus in Kendall which includes independent living, assisted living and nursing and rehabilitative care. The Shahams also developed The Palace at Weston, the city's first active adult community and The Palace Tel Aviv, a continuing care retirement community in Israel.
